Social-movement leaders and organizations across the state increasingly realize that they are part of an interwoven ecosystem for making change – rather than a series of single issues or separate campaigns – and are acting on this realization by working in coordination like never before.
Power Building Strategy

Achieving large-scale change requires capacities to build power at multiple inter-related and inter-dependent levels:

- Individual: Leadership skills and roles among grassroots communities
- Organization: Knowledge, tools, and experiences to achieve change
- Collaborations: Strong relationships that pivot to new issues
- Movement: Broad frame that inspires mass-based action
What is Integrated Voter Engagement

California’s community organizers are innovating models of building power, scaling impact, and making change – and these models seem to be working, particularly with regard to Integrated Voter Engagement (IVE).
